Mora's Story

Just Right Reader

Mora was done packing. They were going to move to North Florida. Mora was worried.

"What will I do in Florida?" she said.

"What if I'm bored?"

"It will be like a new world to explore!" said Connor.

Their new home in Florida had a porch and a horse. It was close to a forest.

"Working with the horse will be your chore," Mora's dad said. "You can give it some corn."

The next morning, they went to explore. They went to the store.

"It is hot here! I should have worn shorts!" Mora said.

They went to the beach and walked on the shore.

"These waves have force!" Mora said.

They walked down the shore and saw a port. A ship dropped its anchor and honked its horn.

They woke up in the morning to an orange sunrise.

"Let's make a fort!" Connor said to Mora.

Mora and Connor made their fort. They tied a blanket to the bed. Then they used a stick for support.

"Next, let's play a sport," Mora said.

Dad kept the score. They played until Mora was sore.

"Do you want to play one more?"
asked Connor.

"I'm done. I'm too sore to play more!"
Mora said.

"Don't forget to check on the horse,"
Dad told Mora.

"I'll help with that chore," Connor said.

Mora was worn out. Exploring this new world made her tired.

"I forget why I was so worried!" Mora said to Connor. "I'm not bored in Florida! We can explore more tomorrow."

And Mora was out with a snore.
