It was noon, and Billy was out gathering wood. Just as he was about to wheel the wood back to the cabin, the forest floor shook.

BOOM! BOOM!

He looked at the trees and shrubs, but there was nothing. Again, the things shook.

Billy took a look. He was about to give up when he saw a smooth tail.

“Was that a moose? Or a baboon? No, moose don’t have tails like that, and baboons don’t live here.”

Billy stood in shock when he saw the animal. It was a dinosaur like in his books and cartoons!

“Am I being fooled? I must film this! The zoo will want proof!”

Billy looked for his phone.

“Wait... its foot...”

Billy took a second to think.

The dinosaur looked woozy. It took one more step and then dropped to the forest floor. Billy wanted to soothe its foot pain.

Billy didn't want to spook it.

"Can I look at your foot?"

He petted the dinosaur and saw some wood stuck to its foot.

"I have just the tools to make the pain go poof!"

Billy took a first aid kit out of his bag. Then, he took out the wood, washed the dinosaur's foot, and looped a bandage over it. All good!

“Whoop! You’re in a good mood now.”

The dinosaur scooted closer to Billy.

“You don’t belong in a zoo. You need lots of room. I won’t tell people I saw you. Now, how about some food before you snooze?”
