video about the book.

One bright morning, after the skies were light, Righley and her mom planted sunflower seeds in their backyard. The bright sun and warm beams of light helped the leaves reach high.

The sunflowers got taller.
They reached high, close to Mrs. Dwight's yard. She was delighted! Righley tied the tall bright petals.

"Will you share some seeds
when they have dried?" Mrs.
Dwight asked.

Birds tried to eat the seeds for their meal. Righley tied a bag of seeds to share with Mrs. Dwight. She held some tight to plant right in the yard.

Everyone loved the sight of the sunflowers standing high.
People walking dogs asked Righley for seeds.

"I cannot lie," she sighed.

"Keeping seeds from the birds might not be easy!"
she cried.

Righley had to get the seeds before the birds. She tried to have fun. She put the seeds in bags and tied them tight. She used bright ribbon to tie the bags just right.

Righley put a bright sign on the gate. She hoped folks would plant seeds right in their yards. Righley was delighted as friends untied the bags.

Please take free sunflower seeds!

Righley's friends loved the seeds in the bags she tied! They were planted along her street.

Thanks to her gifts, the bright sunflowers reached high in the skies and were a bright sight for all.
