Lilly loves living high in the hills.
The daylight offers sights that change with each season.
However, twilight is the highlight of Lilly's day. She loves bright sunsets that light up the night skies.

In the summer, Lilly likes to sit outside as the sunlight fades. She loves the night.

"You might see small bright blinking lights," Mom says.

"They're called fireflies or lightning bugs."

Delighted, Lilly says, "How many tries will it take to catch one?"

Lilly loves the fall. The leaves turn bright orange, red, and yellow. A slight breeze flies. It's time to delight in pies and deep-fried snacks. The lightning bugs are out of sight tonight. It is too cold for them.

Winter is close.

"I see leaves die," Lilly sighs.

Winter is bright with white snow that lies on the hills.

The cold chills right to your bones.

"It's spring," Lilly cries with delight.

The hills are alive. Bright colors are in sight.

"After all the snow melts and the land dries, I might plant a garden right over there," Lilly says.

Mom tries to help.

Summer is here again. Lilly unties her slightly tight sneakers. Twilight has passed and the nightlight is on. It is time for dinner. They are having fried chicken thighs and french fries. Peach pie is for dessert!

“Each season is a delightful sight,” says Mom.

She holds Lilly tight.

Lilly sighs, “You are right. In daylight or night, the hills will always be the right home for me!
It’s my favorite place in the world!”
