Brook was in her room looking for something to do. Her mood was gloomy.

So Dad said, "Let's go to the bookstore!"

Brook looked at Dad.

"Okay!" she said. "I'll get my boots and hoodie!"

Brook and Dad got to the bookstore.

There were so many books! And there was a good kids' nook with a wooden table.

"Brook, pick out a book to read, and you can go sit in the kids' nook!" said Dad as he put his coat on a hook.

Brook picked out a book about a moose, a book on football, and a book about cooking too.

Brook's dad scooted a stool next to her.

"What books did you swoop up?" he asked.

Brook looked at each book. But her lips were drooping.

"Nothing has hooked me just yet," she said.

"You know what would be cool?"
her dad said. "If you wrote a book!"

Brook looked at her dad. Her gloomy mood began to smooth away.

"That would be cool!" Brook said.

Ideas began to ooze from Brook's brain.

"I need a tool to write all this down!" she said. "And soon!"

"You'll need a good notebook!" her dad said.

Brook and her dad stood up from the wooden table of the bookstore's kids' nook. They stood in line to get the notebook.

"Thanks for the notebook, Dad!"

Brook said as they left the bookstore.

"It shook away your gloomy mood!" her dad said.

"Yes! Now, let's zoom home so I can write my new book in my room!" Brook said.
