video about the book.

I'm Sheara. I love to bike. And I love to catch air.

I pull my helmet over my hair and ears. I stare ahead at the pair of ramps.

Ready for that air!

My dad says, "Sheara, my dear, you're not being clear. To catch air means to breathe air."

So I say, "No, Dad. It means you face your fear, stare ahead, get into gear, and jump your bike into midair! Then you ride the air on your bike. And you do it with flair!"

I'm taking my bike down the stairs
when Clair appears. She lives upstairs from us.

Clair says, "Sheara, did you hear?
I can clear the new cones at the park."

"I bet I can too!"

A kid at the park says, "Did you hear about Clair? She can really catch air."

I whisper, "But it's not fair. She's two years older."

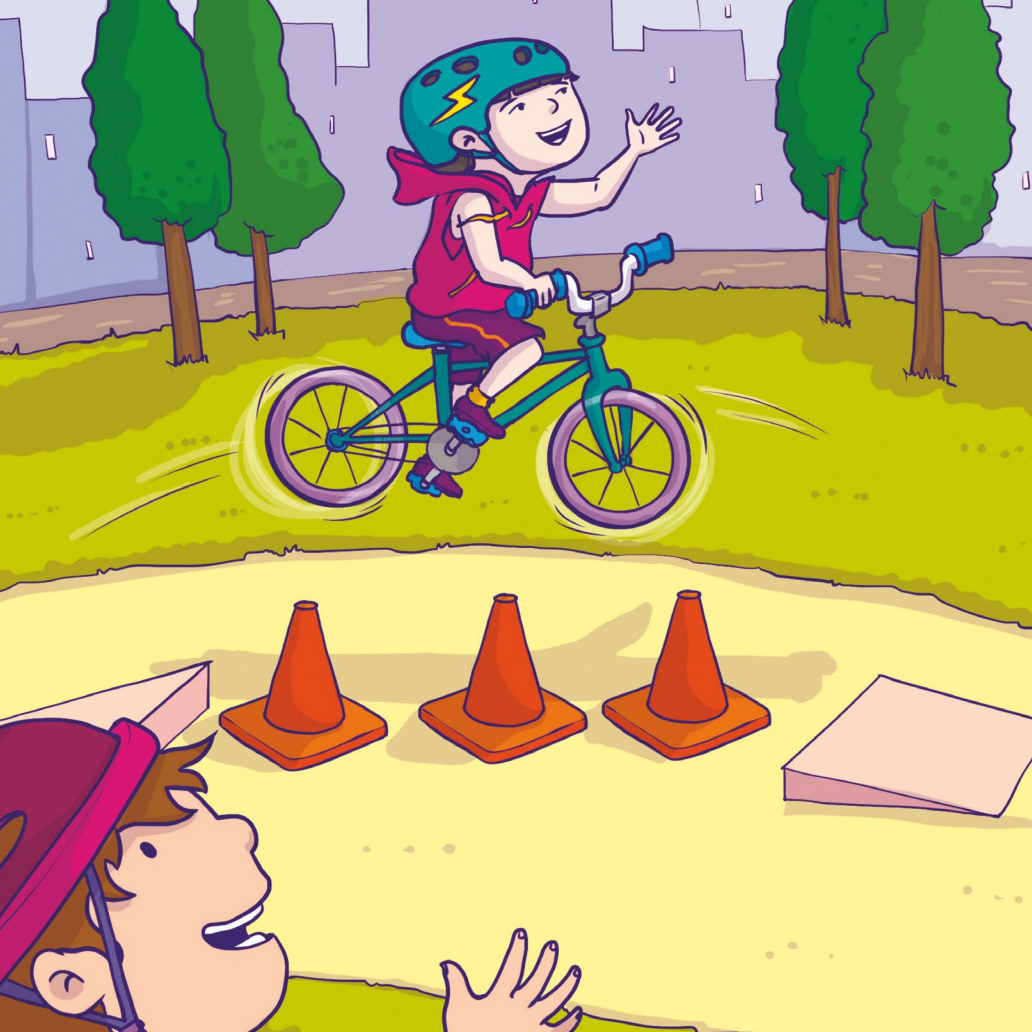

Clair overhears. She pushes her hair aside. It's time to ride!

Clair has no fear. We hear her yelling, "Look at me!"

She rides down some stairs, pulls up her wheel, and sails into midair.

I yell, "Check out that AIR!"

Clair makes it over the cones
but falls.

Phew! Clair is okay! Not to sound unfair, but this time, there wasn't much flair.

Clair's ears are ringing and her gears are bent, but she's fine.

"Oh dear," says Clair. Her bike will need some repairs.

We sit in the chairs near the stairs.

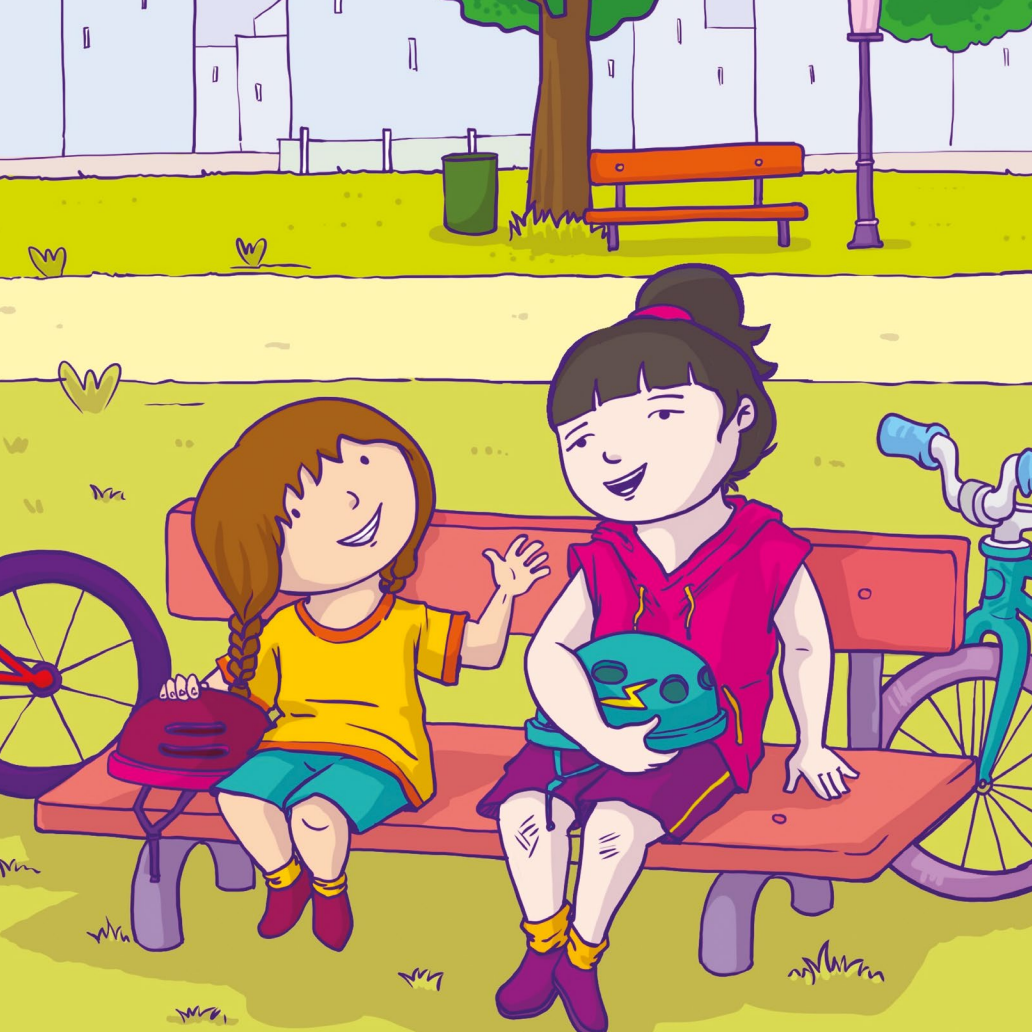

Clair says, "Did you see it?"

"Yeah. Could you hear me cheer?"

"I could hear you cheering me on nearby."

I say, "Clair, please teach me how to catch that air too!"

"Yeah, we make a good pair!"
