Kat loves to write books. She has a room with the perfect nook.

It gets her in the mood to write.

Her ideas bloom into new hooks for tales to take root.

At noon, Flamingo walks through the crooked gate to the front stoop.

"I took a look at your new book!" she exclaims.

Kat zooms after Flamingo.

"What did you think?"

"It was good! Did you proofread?"
asks Flamingo.

Kat shook, no.

"The first look was to see if it could be understood. I will soon though," Kat says. "Did the book hook you?"

"Well, I was rooting for Brooke to be good. She ended up being in a bad mood, which put the whole neighborhood in a bad mood," Flamingo says. "It shook me up!"

Kat was over the moon! The hook for her book was good!

After eating cookies and talking about Flamingo's outlook on Kat's new book, Flamingo stood to go home.

"Thanks for your help! I need to smooth out some loose ends when I proofread," Kat says.

"Then, my book will be complete!"

The next day, Kat sat in her room in the perfect nook.

She looked above the picture on the front cover.

"My book needs a good name," she said.

"I choose 'The Bad Mood!'"

"Now I can share it with the world!"

Kat says.

She took a picture of her new book and wrote "Coming Soon."

People stood in a line that looped the room. It took a long time for a first look.
