My name is Ivy. I have a knack for painting colorfully.

Today, I get to wrap my bedroom walls with a beautiful mural.

I know! I will paint an artful, fearless octopus. Its limbs or tentacles are skillfully driving a vehicle.

Then, a wrinkle as I paint. My joyful octopus grabs my wrist. The next thing I know, I have been knocked into a seat next to my playful friend.

You know, this happens fairly often when I paint. I do what I always do.

No hand wringing, gnawing doubts, or knots in my tummy.

I snugly fasten my seatbelt and enjoy the wonderful ride.

Plentiful icicles successfully form on the car.

The cheerful octopus ably drives past endless clouds made of cotton candy.

The resourceful octopus reaches out with a tentacle to wrest off a goodly chunk for me.

We carefully stop at a giant useless faucet. It is in the wrong place, the middle of the road!

The wily octopus slyly shrugs when I ask about it. Maybe it is absolutely meaningless.

That awful faucet handle was just begging to be wrung.

As I turn it, colorful streams quickly burst from the nozzle filling the limitless sky.

I tightly close my eyes. I get an eyeful when I open them.

My colorless room now has cotton candy hills, a joyful octopus, and twinkly, brightly shining stars.

I get lost in my paintings. They are wonderful, colorful worlds.
